Parents learn to be parents throughout their life. Every day is a learning day. We work better as a team if we know what we want and we improve ourselves. We aim for better time management, better health, more quality time and so on. Leaders have good time management skills. They look for ways to do things faster, better and more efficiently.

There is an essential relationship between parenting and leadership. In fact, I might say that parenting is leadership in its "pure" form. The role of a parent is to build America's future leaders. I say that parenting is "pure" leadership because parents, like all good leaders, must motivate their children to excel.
