Children experience more profound and rapid changes in their young adolescence (ages 10 to 15) than at any other time in their lives. Although infancy is also characterized by extensive growth, "infants are not the conscious witness of their own development," in the way that adolescents are (National Middle School Association, 2010, p.5). The classroom management strategies of middle schools must therefore support students as they move from self-centered morality toward principle-based ...
