Natural tooth behaves much as a collection of mosaics that change color according to the type of light and media in which they are found, and it is this beauty of tooth composition and form that is the inspiration to those who seek to mimic tooth in dental restorations. This stunning atlas is the culmination of more than 25 years of dedicated study into the optical behavior of teeth and restorative materials. Although the author wows readers with dazzling photography throughout, this book moves beyond a mere clinical art book that only shows what is possible. The practical purpose of this book is also to outline the clinical sequences of how to use composite resins and dental ceramics to achieve the optical characteristics observed so exquisitely in natural teeth. By blending art and dental science, the author has created an ultimate textbook on dental anatomy and restorative dentistry that explores the underlying makeup of the layered structures of the teeth and reveals the techniques of how to meet the challenge of mimicking natural tooth.

A ciência das cores tem uma forte ligação com a arte de perceber pequenos detalhes. A cor dos dentes naturais é o resultado da inter-relação da luz com os tecidos mineralizados dos dentes. As características dos tecidos mineralizados mudam com o passar dos anos, o que faz com que a cor dos dentes naturais mude também. Além dessas transformações, propriedades particulares do esmalte e da dentina, como fluorescência, opalescência e contra-opalescência, criam efeitos cromáticos importantes. Com o surgimento de novos materiais, esses efeitos podem ser reproduzidos ou criados nas restaurações, de forma direta ou indireta. A escolha da cor ideal não depende apenas da habilidade profissional, mas também de fatores como condições ambientais, iluminação e materiais disponíveis, os quais influenciam significativamente no sucesso do tratamento. O objetivo deste trabalho é apresentar algumas informações teóricas necessárias para o entendimento do processo de seleção de cor, com o uso de escalas de cores ou de análise instrumental da cor com novas tecnologias, como, por exemplo, os sistemas de escolha de cor baseados em novas tecnologias (Technology-based shade guide systems).
