Place-names are important to the historian and the archaeologist. Quite apart from the inherent interest of the original meaning of a place-name, the fact that in England there are six successive layers of language reflected in the stock of place-names means that they provide vital evidence for dating and, indeed, for estimating the mixture of races in the composition of the nation.

* Nowadays, Irish signposts present place names in two versions – English (usually in CAPITALS) with the Irish version above it in italics. About 90% of those place names, I'm delighted to say, are still of Irish language origin. * You'll notice that most place names have 2 parts – a prefix (at the beginning)
